The Soldiers' Christmas

With scarcely more than ten weeks intervening before we shall have reached that period of the year when all the world is supposed to be merry, and when peoples in every land salute friends and loved ones with words of cheer and gladden their hearts with gifts in keeping with the season; isn't it timely that we, here in America, should concern ourselves with thoughts of our soldiers-who are so bravely fighting our battles and winning our victories in foreign lands-and with what Christmas will mean to them? Isn't it meet that hearts of those boys who must endure winter's merciless chill of snow, or rain, or sleet in trench or dug-out, be made warm by some little remem-brance sent by "some of the folks back home?

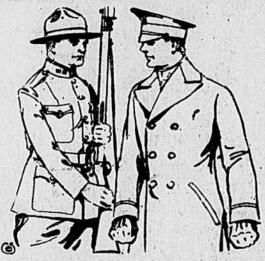

'Certainly," one answers, and one's thoughts instantly turns to two or three of those fellows that one knows intimately, and to several others that one holds merely as acquaintances. "Certainly, I would like to send a Christmas parcel to one, or more, of those boysthey deserve all one can do for themand I'll see that the orders are placed right away."

But don't attempt to send these parcels

Place Your Order at Miller & Rhoads

According to a very recent ruling of the Post-office Department, parcels cannot be sent to soldiers overseas except in cases where the soldier himself requests it and sends a special "Christmas Parcel" label, which is issued him there to be pasted on such parcel. Even in this way a soldier can receive but one parcel, and, unless you happened to be the sender of that one, your parcel could not be sent.

This store is now ready to receive orders for parcels for Christmas delivery to our soldiers in France or England, which will be filled by the great London tore (Harrod's) and sent at the proper time by them directly to their destinations. All that is necessary for one who wishes a parcel sent is come to our Army and Navy Booth (main floor) and select from an easily accessible printed list of articles such things as you desire to be sent; leaving with us the soldier's name, company and regiment. In this way you practically eliminate all risks of loss or

It is important, however, that all such orders be placed at the earliest time possible, for, as in America, help in all lines of trade in England is exceedingly scarce, and sufficient time is required to properly handle many orders if delay is to be

For our soldiers in camps and cantonments in America it is permissible to send such parcels as one chooses; provided, of course, one obeys our government's urgent request and sends one's parcels early.

For this purpose we have had printed in Christmas colors a little sticker for the outside of each Christmas parcel, which reads:

This Is a Christmas Gift for You

It is sent to you very early this year at the request of the government that all gift purchases be bought and shipped as soon as possible, to help conserve men and lighten transportation problems.
